PENN STATE REDUCED TO $1,860,000 IN BUDGET

Pinchot Financial Plan Cuts All State-Aid Institutions.

NEW SYSTEMS PLANNED

Governor Pinchot on Tuesday at Harrisburg submitted to the Legislature the first comprehensive financial budget ever presented, which outlined what money will be available and allotted for the maintenance of the State and various State-aid institutions for two years beginning June 1st., 1923. The budget provides for a total of expenditures in that period of $89,446,115. The estimated income during the period is about $118,000,000, from which there will have to be paid, in addition to the budget, about $29,000,000 to wipe out present unpaid appropriations and other outstanding obligations.

With the exception of the departments of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Commonwealth and the Auditor General, every department, commission, bureau and State-aid institution has been placed on a greatly reduced financial basis, not that the Governor personally wished it, or that work in hand should be curtailed, but because the State lacks the money to do otherwise.

If the budget with its greatly reduced allowances is increased by the Legislature, which is of course within the power of that body, the burden and responsibility, in providing the necessary additional money will, fall upon the Legislature. It can provide additional money only by developing some new source of taxation, or increasing rates of some existing taxes. This is not likely to occur.

Pennsylvania State College has been scheduled in the budget for a cut in its appropriation so severe as to fairly stun the friends of that institution. Whereas the report of the president, Dr. Thomas, set forth estimated needs for the next two years for all purposes at about $9,000,000, the Pinchot budget allows it only $1,860,000. This amount must take care of everything—maintenance, repairs, etc. It makes no provision whatever for new buildings.

While $1,860,000 is allotted, in reality only $1,291,000 for all purposes other than agriculture. This is due to the fact that $569,000 will have to be applied to agriculture if Penn State is to receive the full amount for that purpose from the federal government. The latter matches dollar for dollar the amount appropriated by the State to State College for agricultural purposes.

Just how State College will adjust itself to the new situation is a matter that remains to be worked out. It is apparent at a glance, however, that there will have to be severe curtailment all along the line. Some of the more pessimistic profess to believe that it will become necessary to drop several hundred Freshman students. All friends of Penn State sincerely hope such a drastic step can be avoided.

Of the $2,381,000 asked $1,600,000 was scheduled for maintenance, $450,000 for agricultural extension, $35,000 for engineering extension, $40,000 for summer school extension, and $250,000 for buildings. A deficiency, of $251,000, that must be made up somehow, was also provided for in the amount asked for, but as matters stand now, it will have to be carried along until some future time when the Legislature may by prevailed upon to come to the rescue.

Dr. Thomas, president of Penn State, submitted to the Board of Trustees, at a meeting held several hours after the Pinchot budget had been presented to the Legislature, a report setting forth that about $9,000,000 is necessary to put State College on a substantial footing, take care of the yearly increase in the applicants for enrollment, provide new buildings and make possible development of his plan to make the college a State University. All this has gone into the discard, for the next two years, at least.

State-aid hospitals, such as that at Bellefonte, will receive assistance on a new basis, according to the budget plan. The total amount laid aside for hospitals, penal institutions, etc., about $16,000,000 for two years, will be placed at the disposal of the Department of Welfare. The Bellefonte hospital, by way of illustration, will not receive a lump sum for two years, as heretofore, but will receive funds from the Department of Welfare on the basis of the number of free patients cared for. Just how much the Bellefonte hospital will receive under the new plan is problematical.

VERDICTS IN TWO CASES MAY NOT BE DISTURBED

Judge Quigley Intimates What His Opinions Will Be.

GUARDIAN APPOINTED

Judge Henry C. Quigley presided at a special session of court on Saturday morning and intimated that his opinions will not disturb verdicts granted in the cases of M. E. Shaughnessy vs the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for trespass and the Fidelity Title and Trust Co. vs the First National Bank of Spring Mills.

Both cases have been covered in previous issues of The Republican but for those who might have forgotten the facts they are briefly mentioned.

Shaughnessy was employed by the state and was about his work and traveling on a Pennsy passenger train which was wrecked near Dix station, Bald Eagle valley. He was injured and brought suit for trespass to secure damages, the trial being lengthy and the case hinging much on whether the railroad should be liable as the defendants claimed a defect in a rail that could not be detected by inspection caused the accident. The jury gave a verdict in favor of the railroad company and the arguments on a motion for a new trial were heard in court but Judge Quigley, after hearing them, declared firmly, "Well, there won't be a new trial."

The Spring Mills bank case was tried in December Term of court and resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $5,083 88. The attorney for the bank told the judge that he did not have his brief ready to argue at the special session for a new trial, which had been asked, as he had not been in condition to work as usual. Judge Quigley then intimated that the brief would have to be pretty strong before the verdict would be disturbed.

Previously, the court had considered the appointment of a guardian for the family of Frank Confer, a young man who was taken to Danville recently on account of his brain being affected by an injury received while at work for the Chemical Lime Company, it is alleged. Confer is a young man who was struck on the head and seriously cut, it was said, while working. He was treated in the local hospital until last July but the wound would not respond to treatment and he was taken to Philadelphia where an eminent specialist, Dr. Frazier, was consulted but without success. He was taken to Danville after being examined by a commission. It was shown in court that his family receives approximately $24 every two weeks from compensation insurance but that they needed a guardian. He has a wife and four children. John Spearly, tax collector in Benner Twp., where the family resides, was appointed as guardian.

FISHING CREEK DYNAMITED.

Hundreds of Dead Trout and Other Fish Indicate Haul.

A deep eddy in Fishing creek, one mile north of Mackeyville, was dynamited between Friday noon and Saturday morning by unknown parties. Their evident intention was to secure a big haul of fish and indications are that they succeeded.

Besides the fish taken, hundreds of trout and other fish including many suckers, can be seen on the bottom of the stream at different points below the eddy. Their is evident dissatisfaction at the use of such methods, purely illegal, and also of alleged hunting after night in the same locality. It is reported that parties in automobiles would come into the section and park their cars, with lights burning full, enabling them to attract and easily kill rabbits last season.

Wedding Last June.

Miss Lucy Miller, one of the popular operators in the Bellefonte exchange of the Bell Telephone Co. of Penna., will resign on Saturday evening to make preparations to go to housekeeping in the spring at Williamsport. Perhaps, it would have been better to say Mrs. Norman Calvert, as she changed her name last June, on the 17th, but had since kept her wedding a secret. Mr. Calvert is an eye specialist in Williamsport.

Hiller Property In Bellefonte Finally Sold To Howard J. Thompson This Week

The valuable Hiller property on West High street, Bellefonte, the former home of the late Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Hiller, was sold to Howard J. Thompson, of Curwensville, according to announcement made Wednesday morning. The property was held at $15,000, it was said, but the amount at which Mr. Thompson purchased could not be learned.

Mr. Thompson is quite well known in Bellefonte, having resided for several years on Linn street while he was here as manager of the State-Centre Electric Co. He moved from here to Curwensville when he relinquished his position with the State-Centre Electric Co. to devote more time to his personal affairs.

Nothing definite could be learned as to what the property will become although there was a current rumor that a new theatre would be built between the dwelling and the Katz property.

This is the property which the Brooks-Doll post of the American Legion was anxious to secure for a home and for which they were raising funds. They are also left in doubt as to whether they can still secure the dwelling and plot on which it stands.

Since the death of Dr. Hiller, the house has been unoccupied much of the time but the property seems to be in fine condition.

TAKEN TO GLEN MILLS

Youth Fails to Take Opportunity Given by Judge.

Sheriff Harry Dukeman this week took into custody Harry Kramer, of Aaronsburg, and took the lad to Glen Mills.

Kramer, it is alleged, has been irregular in school attendance and was brought before Judge Quigley recently, where he told a plausible story and was given a chance to make good, but apparently failed.

The lad, according to his story, had been making his home with his grandfather, who had reared and cared for him since he was a baby, but is old now and was unable to clothe the lad properly, so that it was necessary for Kramer to quit school and get a job. When before the Judge, Kramer presented a letter indicating that his step father, a resident of Burnham, had secured work for him and he was about to accept it.

Finding that it was only 25 days until Kramer would have reached his sixteenth birthday, the Judge permitted him to leave so that he might go to work. From what could be learned, the lad did not immediately go to Burnham, but went back to his grandfather's home and began to flout about that he did not have to go to school nor take the orders or suggestions of the school directors and teacher, whereupon information was once more made against the youth and papers were issued for bringing him before the Court again. Being unable to give proper explanation for his failure to grasp the opportunity given, he was ordered sent to Glen Mills.

The lad was brought to Bellefonte Tuesday, delay in carrying out the court's order being on account of sickness. In fact, the officer who brought him to town was censured for not waiting longer until he was in better shape. He was suffering from an aggravated cold. Noting his illness was not to be overlooked, local officials had him examined by a physician here and got medicine for him. The lad hated to go to Glen Mills, however, thinking it would be a disagreeable prison life which he was facing and refused to take the medicine, saying, "Maybe my cold will get worse and then they can't take me." He was told by Mrs. Dukeman that instead of going to the awful place he imagined, he would find on arriving that the Glen Mills school was really a good place for him and that he would likely find it to his liking. Somewhat consoled, he was taken away on the early Lewisburg train on Wednesday morning by Sheriff Dukeman.

More information on his case given by a local official makes the action of the Judge better appreciated. It is said the lad was living under an environment where he had no opportunity to get training that he ought to have to make him a better citizen, so that Glen Mills was chosen as a proper place. He was described as not a bad boy but one who had unfortunately gotten into several doubtful situations because he had no person to guide him. In fact, it is alleged that it was quite likely this condition of being a lively youth with no good counselor to advise had caused him to fail to grasp the opportunity given by Judge Quigley.

Quarantine News.

The home of John McNichols, on Lamb St., from which the quarantine was lifted just a few days ago, was placarded again on Saturday, two more cases developing in the family.

Other homes quarantined during last week were: Fred Crafts, on Spring St.; Elwood L. Johnson, Linn St., and Walter Cohen, Spring St.

The home of James C. Furst was quarantined for measles.

John Watson's home on Lamb street was quarantined for mumps on Tuesday morning.

GIRLS TO PLAY MEN

All-American College Girls Meet Bellefonte Academy.

The most attractive basket ball game of the season is scheduled for next Wednesday evening, Jan. 31, when the Bellefonte Academy team will have as opponents the All-American College Girls five. The latter is the only girls team to successfully play men's teams under men's rules. They are clever and said to be the biggest drawing card in the basket ball field. This season they are making their ninth annual coast to coast tour under a chaperon. The admission price is 50 cents and every lover of basket ball and clean sport should witness this unique game. The following clipping shows what may be expected:

Although the American College girls lost the game with the Seneca Falls male team they showed that members of the gentler sex are not so far inferior to masculine athletes as some might suspect.

The game ended with a score of 36 to 29 in favor of Seneca Falls. The girls took the ball at the start and rushed it for 19 points in the first half, allowing the locals only 14. In the second half the boys seeming to realize that they were in a sure-enough game of basketball, settled down for a total of 22 while their feminine opponents netted 10.

"Go to the Devil" said Willits.

Governor Pinchot was the principal speaker at a largely attended meeting of agriculturists at Harrisburg on Tuesday evening. In his address he highly complimented Frank Willits, the new Secretary of Agriculture, explaining that he had considerable difficulty in prevailing upon Willits to take the job. In fact, Willits didn't take it seriously when the honor was tendered him. Governor Pinchot jokingly remarked that Willits had at first declined in rather picturesque language.

"Go ahead and tell them what I said," spoke up Willits, who occupied a seat on the stage.

Governor Pinchot hesitated and then broke into a hearty laugh. Willits also laughed. All eyes were upon the new Secretary of Agriculture.

"Tell them I said to you 'Go to the Devil,' when you offered me the job," explained Willits.

"Well, he did say something like that, but I didn't go," remarked Governor Pinchot, and the large crowd roared.

Montgomery & Co. Sale.

The "first real sale" put on by Montgomery & Co., one of Bellefonte's oldest firms, met with a rush at the opening on Wednesday morning. Before the doors opened a crowd had gathered to be first in securing bargains. The doors opened at 9 o'clock and the buyers jammed through two by two, each being given a prize package containing useful articles of clothing. The sale has been well advertised and a half-page ad on the back of this issue will be of interest to our readers. One of the cleverest features imaginable calling attention to the monster sale was the dropping of thousands of advertising circulars from an airplane, which soared over Bellefonte and Snow Shoe. Aviator Collier was in charge of the airplane, the circulars being dropped in the midst of a heavy snow storm. Of the hundreds who thronged the Montgomery store on the opening day of the sale were many who carried circulars which had been dropped from the plane while it was thousands of feet in the air.

Husband Killed in Mine.

Mrs. Annie Sokolosky, serving a sentence of six months in jail on being convicted of manufacturing and selling intoxicating beverage, received word this week that her husband had been killed in a coal mine near Osceola Mills when caught under a fall of rock. They have several children who must now depend upon others for care.

BABE WAKENS MOTHER AND PREVENTS TRAGEDY

LIVES WERE IN DANGER

The lives of Mrs. Frank Hull; her infant son, born on Tuesday of last week, and Mrs. Hull's cousin, Miss Irene Cox, of Tyrone, were close to being snuffed out by fumes and smoke from an overheated oil stove on Saturday night. Only the timely awakening of the young mother, disturbed by the fussing of the babe, prevented the tragedy.

Mr. and Mrs. Hull have been making their home with Mrs. Hull's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Cox, on Pine street. Miss Cox has been assisting the family and she was sleeping in the same room with Mrs. Hull and the babe. To keep the room warm, an oil stove had been lit before retiring.

When Mrs. Hull was awakened she was nearly suffocated. The babe was struggling for his breath, the room was filled with fumes and smoke. "Flames from the oil stove were leaping towards the ceiling and I was so frightened I was unable to sleep the rest of the night," said Mrs. Hull.

Her screams aroused others in the house and they got the oil stove turned down without further trouble, excepting that the room was smoked black and the curtains had to be washed and other articles given a cleaning.

SOLICITORS ARRESTED

Charged with Larceny While Soliciting Orphans' Funds.

Annie Davis and Mary Johnson, colored girls, were arrested in Altoona on Friday while soliciting funds for helping orphans. A subscription book, held by one of the girls, indicated they had received many contributions of varying amounts.

The girls were taken into custody after a $20 banknote was missed in the office of the Peerless Biscuit Co., where they had gone apparently to secure a subscription. It is said a number of banknotes were lying about on a table and that the Davis girl snatched a $20 bill.

The money was missed before the girls left the office and they were accused of taking it, but denied doing so. The police were then summoned and the one girl was detained at the office, but the Davis girl fled. She was caught on Eighth Ave. by an officer and, it is said, took the money from her stocking. Both girls were held on a charge of being dangerous and suspicious until the authorities could investigate.

TOURING CAR UPSET

George Meyer, of State College, Escaped Injury.

George Meyer, of State College, one of that town's best known residents, was fortunate in escaping injury, but his Reo car was considerably damaged when it upset near the new bridge on the state road at Lemont, on Saturday night.

Mr. Meyer had been to Boalsburg and was returning alone. As he neared the bridge, the touring car skidded. He was unable to control it, the roads being in bad shape on account of softened snow and ruts. It upset and turned over, the top being ruined.

Hard Fire to Extinguish.

Both fire companies, the Logans and Undines, responded to an alarm for fire Tuesday just after the noon hour at the Ives Harvey residence on the northwest corner of Allegheny and Curtin streets. They found the fire was of a smouldering nature and hard to extinguish. It was between a partition-like part of the first floor, near the furnace, and it was necessary to cut through the floor to get to it. It is believed the furnace caused it. After considerable effort, it was extinguished, the total loss being estimated at several hundred dollars, covered by insurance. The smoke gathered in the house and became so dense that it hindered the firemen in their work and also damaged some articles.

Banquet at Country Club.

The members of the Centre County Bar association went to Hecla Park on Saturday and spent the afternoon and evening at the Nittany Country club. A banquet, with turkey and chickens as the pieces de resistance and the many side dishes set, was a feature. It was an informal affair at which Judge Henry C. Quigley presided. About twenty persons were present.

FINAL SUMMONS FOR COUNTY'S OLDEST MAN

NEAR CENTURY MARK

Centre County's oldest man, George W. Lingle, who was nearing the century mark, died on Monday morning, at ten minutes to 5 o'clock at the home of his daughter, Mrs. James Clark, from infirmities due to his advanced age. The funeral services were held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Clark, on Allegheny street, Bellefonte, on Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock and the funeral procession drove to Blanchard where burial was made in the Disciple cemetery.

Not many persons knew that Mr. Lingle's health had been failing and announcement of his death was very unexpected, although he would have been 100 years old had he lived until April 6. The body, as it lay at rest at the Clark home and was viewed by his many friends, gave no indication as that of a man who had spent close to 100 years in this world. The face, quiet and peaceful, looked more like that of a man of seventy or eighty years.

Born at Reedsville, April 6, 1823, George W. Lingle was a son of Paul and Mary Lingle. In his infancy, the parents moved to Beech Creek and there he grew to manhood, when he left his father's farm to become a canal boatmen, which occupation he followed for many years. On the boats, he met Miss Jane Ellen Johnson and they were united in marriage.

They started housekeeping on a farm near Beech Creek, going from here to Illinois to farm and later returning to Beech Creek, where his wife passed away in 1915 at the age of 80 years.

Nine children blessed their home and eight are living as follows: Mrs. W. P. Bullock, Beech Creek; F. J. Lingle, Johnsonburg; W. S. Lingle, Buffalo; Mrs. E. W. Gardner, Bridgeport, Conn.; Mrs. J. B. Lynn, Beech Creek; Mrs. Fannie Packer, Williamsport; Mrs. C. F. Gladfelter, Jersey Shore and Mrs. James Clark, Bellefonte. He was also the father of three generations with twenty-seven grandchildren and twenty-four great grandchildren.

For several years, Mr. Lingle had made his home with the Clarks. While retaining remarkable health, his weight was too much for his limbs and he was not able to get about of recent years, spending practically all his time in bed or in a chair fixed at a window where he could view life on Allegheny St., taking much interest in modern methods of transportation, autos, the big trucks and the airplane.

On his 99th birthday his children and some friends gathered at the Clark home and helped celebrate the event and anticipation of observing the hundreth anniversary was in evidence. But Providence saw fit to close his wonderful career e'er that time. It may be noted that the genial gentleman, in an interview several years ago, speaking of his years and the closeness to the century mark, complacently replied, "Yes, it will be nice if I live to be a hundred. But, I am just waiting now until my call shall come and when it's time to go, I am ready."

Rev. M. S. Blair, of Wellsboro, pastor of the Disciple church and formerly pastor of Mr. Lingle, came to Bellefonte on Tuesday evening and officiated at the funeral services. He was assisted by Rev. David R. Evans, pastor of the local Presbyterian church, who was located at Wellsboro before he came to Bellefonte.

Rachau, W. M. Bottorf, Luther L. Smith, Joseph Massey, Chas. B. Hughes, Betty Orvis Harvey, James O. Brewer, A. R. McNitt, J. L. Spangler, H. Russell Smith, Isaac Underwood, Jas. T. Caldwell. Several names as published last week—John Love, Miss Bertha Wagner, Paul Shaffer, T. H. Powers, C. Kellerman—do not appear on the list sent out from the Chautauqua office at Swarthmore.

WOMAN SO ILL COULD NOT WORK

Marion, Ind.—"I was all run-down, nervous and bent over. I could hardly drag around, let alone do my work. I read some letters in the papers telling what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others and I thought I would try it. Then a man told my husband about his wife and what good it had done her and wanted him to have me try it. I took one bottle and could see what it did for me in a week's time, and when I had taken three bottles I had gained both in strength and weight and was doing my own work. I took it before my last baby was born and it helped me so much. I sure am glad to recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman who suffers from female ailments, for I know by experience what it can do. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, also the Liver Pills, too, and think them fine."—Mrs. Wm. Eldridge, 620 E. Grant Street, Marion, Indiana.

"When I started my first term as governor of Colorado I figured everybody was impressed with the dignity of the office. This impression was rudely shattered.

"I was invited to deliver a speech at a fair in the southern part of the state. Mrs. Shoup accompanied me. When we arrived, the reception committee at the station missed us entirely. After waiting a while for recognition we decided to go with the rest of the crowd to the grounds. Unnoticed and unattended we ambled along. As we drew near the entrance someone shouted:

"'Did the governor come?'

"'No!' boomed a heavy bass voice behind me, 'The big stiff failed to show up.'"—Exchange.

BABES 'STUPID,' SHE SLAYS THEM

TWO CHILDREN DEAD

Because Little Ones Were Not as Smart as She Thought They Should Be Woman Tries to Kill Self With Them.

Portland, Ore.—"I planned it all ahead. My babies were not as smart as they should have been—as smart as other persons' babies—so I turned on the gas. We would all have died together."

Thus did Mrs. George Feles explain her deed after police found her in the kitchen of her home, unconscious from the effects of gas, and her two children, Margaret, one, and James four, lying dead beside her.

"I dragged the cot into the kitchen," said Mrs. Feles. "Then I went back and got Marjorie, and then James. They didn't know what I was doing. I turned on the gas stove. James cried and wanted to get out when he smelled the gas. Marjorie only whimpered. I frightened them both into keeping quiet. That's all I remember."

Charge of Murder Filed.

If a lunacy commission does not find her mentally unbalanced, she will face the consequences. After he had heard her story, Deputy District Attorney Kirk filed formal charges of murder against her in municipal court.

For the first time since the tragedy Mrs. Feles shed tears at the mention of her husband. She told authorities that she had attempted to take her life on many occasions. Nine specific attempts she recalled. Once before she sought to do way with herself and James, but failed.

Some one asked her: "You couldn't tell James and Marjorie had mental deficiencies at their age?"

"Oh, yes, I could," she replied. "A mother always can tell."

She spoke only when urged to it, and then in a hopeless voice.

Neighbors and relatives said that James and Margaret were fine children. James was a sturdy, bright-eyed, laughing youngster, who would have been a joy in any home. He had dark hair and curls, and from his big eyes he looked at the world with an impish expectancy, all in striking contrast with his frail, drab little mother.

Turned on the Gas.

Mother Looks Very Thin.

Against the pillow at St. Vincent's, Mrs. Feles' pinched face looked very thin. Her taffy-colored hair lacked luster; her eyes had little more life than had James' eyes when he was found almost dead there in the kitchen. Her skin was covered with scratches, self-inflicted.

First explanation that the woman was a victim of puerperal insanity were scouted by physicians. Dr. F. J. Ziegler, who has the woman in charge, said that insanity of the sort was peculiar to women at time of maternity, and pointed to the fact that Margaret, the younger child, was a little more than a year old.

Congenital weakness might be responsible for the woman's condition and for the queer perversion of her mother love which led to her belief that the children were not smart and to the tragic act.

Health is Your Most Valuable Asset

Pittsburgh (North Side), Pa.—"When I reached middle life I became in a nervous, hysterical condition with despondent spells and frequent heat flashes, also pains in my right side. Power Rights From This Dam Asked by Ford

An exclusive photograph, taken from an airplane, of the Mississippi river high dam between St. Paul and Minneapolis, for which Henry Ford has applied to the federal power commission for power rights. The Detroit motor car maker, if granted permission to harness this water power, has announced he will build a ten-million-dollar automobile, tractor and farm implement plant on the banks of the river. Also he will open a barge line to run down the Mississippi, carrying freight to St. Louis, Memphis and New Orleans. On the return trips the barges would carry coal from Kentucky and southern Illinois fields.

Science Finds Use for Waste

COAL DUST MADE INTO BRICKS

Do you know of anything that is being wasted that these scientists might try their hands on?

Washington, D. C.—Savants have shown that if the atmosphere were not impregnated with dust there would be no cloud effects, no radiant sunsets, no soft afterglow of harmonious colorings which lend a halo to the quiet of eventide. Also, there could be no condensation of moisture as in rain, mist or fog without nuclei such as dust particles.

That is one of the stories of the usefulness of dust, but government scientists and others are more interested just now in determining what can be done with dusts of specific kinds that have long constituted big items of waste in various industries.

Perhaps the most interesting development of the experimental work that has been going on is in connection with the problem of what to do with sawdust. Ever since the first saw bit its way through a piece of timber the enormous waste in sawdust has been a matter to worry over. In time it was found that this debris could be made commercially valuable as the basis of various manufactures. Oxalic acid is produced on a large scale from sawdust, and sawdust is also used in the carbonating stage of the process for the manufacture of soda ash.

Alcohol From Sawdust.

But now it has been discovered that sawdust can be converted into a food and by carrying the process a step further alcohol may be produced.

The sawdust food is one for beast and not for man, but nevertheless it is useful and may become a factor in farm economics. Sawdust alcohol will not be used for beverage purposes, but there is a great need for a new motor fuel to take the place of gasoline or to supplement the supply of that article which is not keeping pace with the demand, and alcohol seems to hold out the greatest possibilities in that direction.

White pine sawdust is used in this process. It is treated with dilute sulphuric acid and cooked under pressure with steam. This brings about a chemical change in which the sawdust is partially converted into glucose, a simple sugar which is both digestible and of food value. There is from 14 to 18 per cent of glucose in this mixture, which is then neutralized with lime, the sugar dissolved and the solution filtered off and boiled down under reduced pressure until it is of the consistency of molasses. This molasses is then mixed with the partially dried sawdust residue and the result is a product closely resembling bran.

Farmer Had Right Idea.

Thus it would appear that the tight-fisted farmer who tried feeding his mules excelsior and sawdust as substitutes for grass and bran mash had the right idea. His trouble was that he did not prepare the stuff properly.

In producing alcohol from the bran mixture the essential step is to let the sugar in it ferment. It is estimated that three to four hundred million gallons of alcohol could in this way be derived from sawdust, shavings and bits of lumber that are wasted each year in the mills of the country.

The debris of the lumber industry is by no means the only dust that is being conserved and put to useful purposes. Coal dust is another notable example, and in view of the present shortage in the coal supply as a result of the strike its utilization is especially important.

For years the culm or dust produced in sizing anthracite for the market, was regarded as practically worthless, although it was for the most part perfectly good coal. It could not be handled or shipped economically, however, and the consumer did not know how to use it, so it was permitted to go as waste. Smaller and smaller sizes of anthracite were found useful until now the dust itself is being burned, either through a powdered-coal burner which sprays the pulverized fuel into the furnace or firebox, or in the form of briquettes.

A corporation recently formed has an establishment at Alexandria, Virginia, where a new process of preparing a fuel that is an amalgam of coal dust and crude oil is being exploited. It is claimed that a wholly satisfactory substitute for anthracite for domestic purposes is being produced, and it is also said that it can be marketed at a price that is altogether interesting in these days when the so-called law of supply and demand is sending the cost of anthracite skyward.

Briquettes are made of other materials in the campaign against waste. Metal filings and turnings are subjected to pressure and thus converted into compact masses that can be charged into furnaces and remelted with the least possible loss. Powdered ores and minerals that would either blow away or clog the smelters, may be handled in similar fashion and made almost as satisfactory as lump ore. Immense quantities of disintegrated iron ore that were formerly considered of little or no economic importance are thus made available.

In at least one instance the utilization of dust has been brought about, not as a mere measure of economy, but in order to save the industry itself. In smelting valuable metallic ores, notably copper and lead, considerable quantities of arsenic contained in the ores are driven off with the furnace gases in the form of a fume or very fine dust. This fume or dust settles over the farms for great distances surrounding the smelters and causes great injury to all kinds of vegetation, with the result that the smelting companies were being mulcted for heavy damages constantly, and there was a prospect that they might be required to shut down their plants.

Experts were called in and eventually a way was found to eliminate the bulk of the poisonous dust from the flue gases. The white arsenic thus collected aggregates thousands of tons annually and it is devoted to many useful purposes. It is converted into pigments, compounds of value in medicine and in the dye industry, and into insecticides for spraying orchards, vineyards and gardens.

Careful With Gold Dust.

There is one kind of dust that everybody has always been more than anxious to utilize and that is gold dust. If any of that goes to waste it is because it cannot be avoided. In all the varied mining processes and wherever gold is handled in the mints or in the arts every precaution is taken to conserve every particle of the precious metal. In fact, dust is gathered and saved that is so fine that it is little more than "color."

In placer mining all the gold is "dust," but it occurs in scales, grains or nuggets, and all the particles are smooth and rounded, thus differing from vein gold which is sharp and angular. The nuggets have varied in size from small grains to one found in Australia that weighed 2,520 ounces and was worth about $42,000. Appropriately enough this nugget was christened "Welcome Stranger." The largest nugget found in California weighed 280 ounces. Russia has produced one of 96 ounces and the Klondike one of 85 ounces. By far the greatest proportion of the gold recovered, however, is in medium and fine dust.

Where gold is handled in large quantities all sweepings and all dust collected by vacuum cleaners is saved, for it contains minute particles of gold that in the aggregate and in the long run amount to large sums. Even the clothes worn by those who handle the gold are "mined" at stated intervals.

FELL 2,000 FEET

Son of State College Professor Slightly Injured.

The daily papers last week carried a dispatch from Avalon, Cal., telling of the splintering of the seaplane S-5 L-2 when it crashed into rocks off Catalina islands, the death of the pilot, Lieut. Wm. H. Rorhbach, of Norfolk, Va., and injuries of two other naval officers.

The plane fell from a height of 2,000 feet. One of the injured men was Lieut. M. B. Gardner, who is a son of Prof. and Mrs. F. D. Gardner, of the Pennsylvania State College. He sent his parents a telegram which they received during the weekend and which states that his injuries were only a few bruises and a sprained ankle.

Streams Ice-bound Twice.

Streams throughout this section and the Susquehanna river as far south as Harrisburg became ice-bound last week for the second time this winter. This is not to be taken as a definite sign that winter will remain with us long, however, as the ground is not frozen, excepting for a few inches, when the snowfalls started and the sun is high, making the afternoons quite warm on clear days, which those who like spring-like weather consider as an indication that the bluebirds and robins will be here before long.

The second break-up of the winter came the early part of this week, the ice going out on a low flood in the Susquehanna river and on local streams, doing no damage. The break-up was caused by the mild weather and heavy rains over Sunday, together with melting of the snow.

Executive—N. E. Robb, Robert F. Hunter, Willis Bottorf, Harry Yeager, George Hazel.

Financial—William H. Brouse, Frank Crawford, Gordon Montgomery, Calvin Troup, Jas. R. Hughes, S. D. Gettig.

The association at the regular business meeting last week decided to sponsor the movement put on by the Centre County Farm Bureau to have sixty boys in Centre County form the Centre County Potato club, each boy to agree to plant one acre of potatoes and to care for them until ready for market. Great enthusiasm was shown in this project and it is thought little difficulty will be met with in securing one business man to back one boy of the club and assist him in getting the crop produced. This movement is urged to secure a greater home production of potatoes.

The association also voted to pay expenses to the State Farm Products show in Harrisburg this week for three of the boys selected to represent Centre County at the Vocational judging contests at Spring Mills on the 12th.

Good Health.

Good health depends much on the care of the mouth, according to Dr. A. W. Thornton, dean of dentistry at McGill university in Montreal. Teeth, tongue and lips are the strongest fortification against disease, the surest road to ill health, he declared at the opening of the International Dentist's clinic in Chicago on last Thursday. More than 10,000 dentists from America and Europe were present at the opening. Local doctors have frequently suggested to patients with mild forms of sore throat to gargle with weak salt water. Forming a regular habit of cleansing the mouth and of gargling with a weak salt water solution is an aid toward better health.

The men were placed under arrest by L. K. Hogarth, traveling game protector, of Smethport, and Grant Stout, game protector, of Renovo, assisted by two state police from Renovo. The men's homes were searched and the parts of the two deer found. It is said that the meat indicated the deer had been killed.

Union, in trios with one of our highly esteemed violinists, Mrs. Louis Schad. The programme will consist of chamber-music by composers of different countries, among the numbers being piano and flute solos. Lovers of chopin will have a rare treat in Mrs. Harvey's piano solos.

They have best wishes of The Republican and a host of friends.

A Flapper There Was

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Oh, flappers, they bore me to death!" Dick Haldane said with disgust, "all of 'em alike. Bobbed hair, bare knees, earrings and powder. Faugh!"

The last was an exclamation that was supposed to show scorn, but his companion only laughed.

"You'll get over it, Dick!" he laughed, "everybody else's failing for them, it'll be your turn next."

Dick Haldane swung his pack to his shoulder and set off down the road, turning to halloo a last farewell at the bend of the road to the man that was leaning against the cabin rail.

It was warm with the sun on his back, but Dick drew in great breaths of the winey air of the mountains and strode out to the trail, where balsams cut out his view of the climb ahead. He was humming to himself, rejoicing in his freedom from the grind of the office and the multitudinous voices of the city.

He topped a hill and stopped to rest for a moment on a slate ledge. How it happened, he was never sure. But he felt himself shoot forward with a sickening lurch and then he crumpled over with his left foot under him. He tried to rise and then he realized that his foot was wrenched. He could scarcely move.

"By George," he cried out, "and Jim's gone for the day down to Gloversville! How'm I—"

He looked up to see that some one was staring down at him with interest. Dick flushed. The person staring at him was no other than an abhorred flapper. Her pert head was tilted on one side and her short curling hair stood out like an aureole. She wore knickers. If there was one thing Dick despised on a woman it was knickerbockers. The powder was not apparent nor were the earrings, but Dick knew her breed and prepared to spar with her.

"Hurt?" she asked calmly.

He vouchsafed her a nod.

"Perhaps," she said airily, "I could lug you along to that cabin—"

"I'm not asking the impossible," Dick said rudely.

She paid no apparent attention to his last remark. But going over to the side of the trail she picked up a mountain stock and handed it to him.

"Lean on that, grandpa," she said gravely, "and I'll support you on the left wing."

Dick rose. He decided he would show her. He leaned on her shoulder none too lightly, but after the first few steps he forgot that he was showing her, but he knew that he was going to get to that cabin somehow. The girl at his side was just a support like the mountain stock in his other hand.

Twenty minutes later they reached the cabin and Dick, sinking to the couch, saw her face white and spent with hard-bitten lips.

"You poor little kid, you're all tired out!" he exclaimed.

"Tired nothing!" she gasped, and managed to smile. "A mere step," she ended flippantly.

Dick grunted something. There she stood, a flapper to the top of her curly mop, with feet wide apart, thumbs clinging to the lining of her pockets.

"Thanks," he managed. "All right now. You—"

But she paid no attention to him, turning once to command, "Don't move!" as she saw him reaching for his pipe on the table.

Dick lay back and closed his eyes. Next he knew she was bending over him. "Sit up and put your foot in this!" He dipped his foot in the steaming tub of water, wondering mistily how she had done it so quickly. He felt her fingers cool and deft binding his ankle tightly with something she drew from her day knapsack, and then he dozed pleasantly away.

It was a delicious odor that wakened him, the rich smell of boiling coffee, and as he sat up and sniffed the air he saw her come into the room airily, carrying a tray balanced on one hand while she poised a coffee pot in the other.

"Think you can take a little nourishment?" she asked with a gleam in her brown eyes.

Dick opened his eyes. Toasted bread and bacon, coffee and scrambled eggs! He wondered if he were seeing things. In the most matter-of-fact way his companion spread a place for him on the table and dragged it over to him. He watched her with wondering eyes. What was this remarkable child, a cook or a witch?

He fell to without a word, and not until the last broiled bacon sandwich was consumed did he lean back with a sigh of content.

"I've eaten meals," he began gratefully, "but I never—"

Then he saw the gleam in her brown eyes something between mockery and devilry and he stopped short.

"I say, I'm awfully sorry."

"What for?" she asked airily.

"For thinking you a flapper," he answered.

Her cheeks flamed poppy red; she tossed back her short curls. "But I am, and proud of it!" she threw back at him. "But just because I am a flapper and wear knickers and bob my hair and dance until dawn, do you think that's all I can do? Oh, I know you're that horrid friend of Jim's, who's bored to death at flappers! As if they were some kind of insect or other. Don't you know that flappers are girls? Don't you know they're just the same as old-fashioned girls, except that they dare more and do more and think more?" she blazed.

Then she caught up the tray and dashed out of the room.

Dick was smoking very hard when she came back again.

He looked at her curiously, as though he had not seen her before. Now he saw her eyes were almost bright with tears and she was biting her lips to keep them from trembling. Her cheeks had a curve that was babyish, and her lashes were long enough to curl.

"Getting dusk," he said briefly. "Don't think you'd better stay. No chaperon—"

He heard a little laugh like a brook bubbling over a stone.

"I'm not afraid of dusk!" she gurgled.

It was cool in the mountains at night. She knelt and laid logs on the hearth, and Dick watched the slender kneeling figure, watched the flames come up magically and curl about the wood. How clever she was! How self-reliant! How fearless!

She must have read some of his feeling in his eyes when she stood up, for she said suddenly, "I've—I've got to go. I'll come up in the morning and get your breakfast. I'm staying at the foot of the hill. Good night!"

Dick was still smoking when Jim pushed open the door late that night.

"Heard you had a fall, old chap. Some flapper rescued you," Jim began.

Dick sat up and growled out, "Be careful what you say there, old man! Not a flapper, but the girl I'm going to marry!" but to himself only he added, "Please God!"

ASTOR SAW FUTURE CLEARLY

Trader's Dreams of Pacific Northwest as Land of Destiny Have Long Been Justified.

John Jacob Astor came to New York from Germany in 1783 to engage in the fur trade. He formed the American Fur company, which carried on a flourishing business in the Upper Mississippi country and on Lake Superior.

In 1810 Astor organized the Pacific Fur company. As chief executive he sent out an expedition to establish a trading post at the mouth of the Columbia river. The expedition established the town of Astoria. Astor was betrayed by some of his partners, who sold the post to one of his rivals. Then the War of 1812 broke out, and the British seized Astoria.

Astor's plans were shattered, but his early dream of the Pacific Northwest as a land of destiny has long since been justified. Astoria marks the spot where the extreme East first began to develop the extreme West on an organized scale.

Small-Town Fire Engine.

What might be described as a double tandem bicycle with four wheels arranged like those of a wagon, and four seats for riders, two in front and two behind, and carrying a hose reel, rotary pump, etc., was exhibited recently in Paris. The machine is intended as a fire engine in small towns. When the scene of the fire is reached the pedals are thrown into gear with the pump, the hose is unrolled, and the riders, resuming their seats, work the pumps by means of the pedals. It is claimed that this machine can outstrip any fire engine drawn by horses on the way to a conflagration, and that its pump is at least as effective as those of the hand engines used in many towns.

Agricultural Congress.

At the meeting of the International Agricultural commission in Paris last summer, attended by representatives from France, Belgium, Italy, Holland, Poland and Switzerland, it was decided to hold an international agricultural congress at Paris in May or June, 1923. This will be the eleventh international congress of agriculture, and the first held since the war.

OVER THE COUNTY

On account of an epidemic of scarlet rash, the Woodward public school was closed, but re-opened again last week.

Hay has taken several advances in price until the rate paid in city markets now is $22 and $23 per ton. More hay has been selling through local farmers this month.

Henry Stytzer, of Rebersburg, was hauling ice recently when he was afflicted with a stroke and lost his voice. Since then he has been confined to his home and has shown little improvement.

Centre Hall is boasting of how quickly its citizens clean the snow and ice from their pavements. Very few in that borough are left in a dangerous condition for pedestrians. Why is it that so many persons in Bellefonte let the snow and ice on their pavements when Council has threatened to have them cleaned?

Kerlin's Grand View Poultry farm sent four S. C. White Leghorn hens and one cockerel to T. H. Hai, a prominent Chinese banker and poultry fancier, of Shanghai. The pen of chickens will travel 10,000 miles and will be on their journey for five weeks. Shipment was made through an export agent in San Francisco and the total of the transportation charges was above $50. The charges include transcontinental express on fowls and feed, California state tolls, marine insurance insurance including mortality, ocean freight, etc.

Boys from Centre County who represented this section at the State Farm Products Show in Harrisburg this week are: Lester Beaver, dairy cattle judging, and Roy Vonada, corn judging, both of Millheim; Reeder Patton, poultry, Port Matilda High school. Three boys from the Spring Mills Vocational school will represent their school; Maurice Zettle, dairy cattle; Thomas Hosterman, poultry; Elmer Decker, corn judging. The boys were selected at the recent judging contest at the Spring Mills school. There were 34 contestants in the different judging contests.

The Presbyterian church building at Spring Mills is being offered for sale.

Is this luck? William Gferer, of Centre Hall, took his car from a stable where he stored it and had it in a garage for repairs when the excessive fall of snow caused the barn to collapse.

The board of directors of the Farmers National bank of Millheim were elected recently by the stockholders and are as follows: Dr. G. S. Frank, Prof. C. L. Gramley, A. A. Frank, L. E. Stover, R. S. Stover, H. E. Crouse and F. M. Fisher.

A sledload of young folks from the Millheim High and grammar schools went to the Wolfes Chapel school house on a recent evening and had an old-fashioned spelling bee. Hildred Kessler was awarded a pound box of chocolates for spelling correctly more words than any other present.

One of Penns valley's successful dairy farmers is A. F. Vonada, tenant on the Gentzel farm near Spring Mills. He keeps 17 well fed and slickly groomed cows that are paying him well for their feed and care. He sells butter, manufactured on his farm by power machinery, in the Lewistown markets, and has steady customers who give him good prices. The churn, worker and print are all operated by power. Then the prints are put in individual cartons and handled as a first-class product.

The mail to and from Millheim was carried on sleds last week because of the snow-filled roads being too trying, in fact impossible, for the motor car customarily used. The Rebersburg mail carrier was tilted into the snow when he turned into a pile of snow to put mail in a patron's box and the sled upset. His team ran away, but was caught later. J. N. Moyer, a teacher in a nearby public school, was with him and thrown under the sled and fence in such a manner it was necessary to break a rail before he could be released. He was fortunate in escaping injury.

Centre Co. Bank Appraisement.

An appraisement of the assets of the Centre County Banking Co., not including the property of the partners, however, was filed in the court at Scranton last week. The amount of the appraisement was not learned, but it is understood upon good authority that it is not much different from that announced, soon after the bank closed its doors, at a meeting of the depositors held in the Court House in Bellefonte. The proceedings relating to the individual holdings of partners have not yet been settled.

FARM MEETINGS

Will Take Place of Former Farmers' Institutes.

The Centre County farm bureau will conduct a series of meetings during February and early March to take the place of the Farmers' Institutes which were so popular in Centre County a few years ago. The plan is to include five communities holding meetings at weekly intervals, discussing one or two subjects at each meeting. This proved very successful at Spring Mills last winter.

The series will start Jan. 29 at which time the subjects of farm crops and fertilizers will be discussed with special emphasis on corn and legume crops.

The schedule is as follows:

Monday, 7:30 P. M., in Grange Hall, Stormstown.

Tuesday, 7:20 P M., in school house at Pine Grove Mills.

Wednesday, 7:30 P. M., school house at Aaronsburg.

Thursday, 7:30 P. M., Vocational school at Spring Mills.

Friday, 7:30 P. M., Furnace school at Howard.

Stop! Look! Listen.

Rehearsals are now under way for the musical comedy to be presented at the Garman opera house February 7 and 8 by the glee club of the local High school. The cast contains twenty-six principals, while more than a hundred and fifty students are placed in the various choruses, drills and dances. The Japanese Fantasy, under the title of "Wi-Hung's Tea House" is the most pretentious and spectacular play yet attempted by these young students and bids fair to be their best production. It is so full of pure, wholesome fun and wit, its music as unique as it is entrancing, and its costuming and stage settings so beautiful, that the glee club members are sure you cannot help liking it. A genuine surprise and treat is in store for those hearing the many new voices that will be included, and in the dramatic ability displayed by Bellefonte's coming singers and entertainers. We hope the public will endorse the good work this music organization is doing, and by packing the house both nights prove an inspiration to the club, enabling it to forge ahead and complete the work outlined for the balance of the term.

Bus and Truck Collide.

One of Emerick's busses being driven toward Bellefonte and the Oldsmobile truck, owned and driven by Daniel Kittrell, well known local colored man, collided at the nail works on the pike between Bellefonte and Milesburg on Tuesday morning about 8 o'clock. Kittrell was going to Milesburg to haul coal for Miss Julia Grove. His truck was considerably damaged. This was the second accident to occur to men employed the past two months by Miss Grove to haul coal. Rufus Ray was driving the bus. The body of the bus was also damaged considerably toward the rear of the car.

Former Snow Shoe Girl Weds.

A wedding of interest to many of our readers took place in Philadelphia on Jan. 13th when Miss A. Grace Langton, formerly of Snow Shoe, became the bride of Richard P. Brownell, an Internal Revenue Inspector, of that city. The bride will be remembered as an efficient teacher in the public schools of Centre County and as later leaving the profession to take up business. She is very well and favorably known and will have the best wishes of numerous friends for a happily wedded life.

Near East Local Work.

The first week in February will be Near East Relief week in the county. The people of this county have been blessed with food and clothing. Let us share them with the little children of Asia Minor as we would want the rest of the world to share with the little children of Centre County if they were starving and unprotected. Chas. M. McCurdy, Bellefonte, treasurer for Near East Relief in Centre County, will gladly receive and acknowledge money sent in at any time.

Rev. Weston Injured.

Rev. Zaccheus Weston, of the Methodist church, formerly at Milesburg and Unionville and since then at North Bend, in Clinton County, was severely injured Friday when he slipped on ice at his garage at the rear of his home and fell. His back was hurt and he has since been confined to bed.

Coal Profiteer Is Barred.

Punishment for charging $22 per ton for coal, which was called profiteering, caused the public service commission to issue an order preventing delivery of coal over the Pennsy railsoad to M. J. Carroll, a dealer of Philadelphia. Carroll claimed he had to pay a big price to coal brokers to get the coal but it did not stop the commission from barring him from getting more coal.

MINISTERS MEN OF MEDICINE

Both in England and America Clergyman Acted as Doctor in the Seventeenth Century.

Some of the medicines dispensed in the Seventeenth century were fearful and wonderful concoctions. Human skulls, bones, human fat, mummies, etc., were freely prescribed. At the deathbed of Charles II a preparation from a human skull was administered.

The education of the pharmacist at this time was largely based on his trade experience, although some knowledge of Latin was required. The apprenticeship lasted from five to six years, and at the end of that time he became a "journeyman." On assuming control of a pharmacy as a proprietor, he was required to pass a supplementary examination.

Pharmacy in America during the Seventeenth century was largely based on English usages modified by practices derived from the Indians. In Massachusetts, a great many clergymen practiced pharmacy for a means of livelihood, while preaching. Indians and old women also practiced it. The witchcraft epidemic brought the practitioners of pharmacy into suspicion as selling poisons for spells.

"One morning," related the professor, "as I was strolling along a street in Edinburgh, I stopped at a tobacconist's and bought some cigars. Finding myself out of matches I asked the clerk for some.

"'Ha'pence a box,' said he.

"'What! Why, in America when a man buys a cigar he is given a small package of matches.'

"'I'm sorry, sir, but they're ha'penny a box here.'

"And, do you knonw," added the professor, "I had to walk back eight blocks to my hotel to get some matches."—Judge.

Matter of Dismissal of Stenographer Simplified by "Insult" Conveyed in Unqualified Statement.

Mrs. Carter dropped in at the office for a few minutes' chat with her husband.

Mrs. Carter, when she said this, thought the stenographer was safely out of hearing—but she wasn't! She stepped to the door of the private office and vented her indignation:

"Madam, I'll have you know that I wouldn't flirt with your old husband for a million dollars!"

Mrs. Carter was aghast.

"Now, John," she exclaimed, "you simply must discharge that girl! She has insulted you!"—Kansas City Star.

While at the table, the hostess served Benny with a second piece of cake. On his noncommittal acceptance of the favor, he was admonished by his mother:

"Now, what do you say, Benny?"

Hastily gulping down the last fragment of the second slice, Benny replied, with difficulty:

THE BOY THAT FAILED

FATHER had planned a brilliant future for him. Mother's high hopes for his success were supported ably by her everlasting faith in him.

But the boy was a bitter disappointment. He was being outdistanced steadily by his schoolmates, was dull, listless all the time, "felt sick" most of the time, never had "pep" for play nor ambition for his future.

Father had about given him up. Poor mother's heartstrings were nearing the breaking point. Evidently, it was not to be.

Then an old friend of the family—a man successful in every sense—came to the boy's rescue. Today, the father is proud of the boy who is indeed a joy to his mother.

It was simply a case of poor digestion, sluggish liver and constipation gradually dulling the senses and poisoning the system.

Knowing from experience that Beecham's Pills were harmless as well as efficient, the old friend suggested them. They made the boy well—as they have hosts of other children, and grown-ups, too, who suffered from like disorders.

Use Airplane to Seek Old Cities

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY MADE

British Pilot Finds Location of Two Lost Cities of Opis and Sitace—May Push Back History Another Age.

New Haven, Conn.—Lost cities of ancient civilizations, buried for thousands of years beneath the shifting sands of Egypt, Mesopotamia and Arabia, will soon be located through the use of airplanes, according to Prof. R. A. MacLean of Rochester university, late staff officer with the British troops in Persia, who discussed this problem before the Archeological Institute of America.

The archeologist, circling about some 2,000 feet in the air, with a clear sweep of vision for 20 miles in all directions, can make out certain continuous lines of depression, indicating ancient irrigation channels, with mounds strewn along these lines indicating buried cities.

Ordinary surveys could never reveal this because of the great distances covered by them. Under the very ground on which countless caravans have passed for more than 5,000 years and where even scientific expeditions may have pitched their camps for the night, lie cities whose contents may push back history another age, whose wealth in gold, silver and precious stones may far surpass anything unearthed even in Egypt.

May Find Lost Cities.

An important discovery has already been made by a British pilot, involving possibly the definite location of the lost cities of Opis and Sitace—the famous centers of ancient culture and wealth described by Xenophon 2,500 years ago, but never heard of since. The pilot operating last summer in Mesopotamia noticed while on his numerous air reconnaissances what appeared to be a long natural delignment covering many miles.

This depression branched off from the Tigris river at Bagdad, ran south a bit, and then curved gradually back to the river, finally running into it at Samarra. Along this depression were many mounds—appearing from above as mere discolorations. Major Beaseley, commanding the air post there, and an enthusiastic archeologist himself, when told of this passed the news on to Professor MacLean, and a series of flights were at once arranged.

On these air surveys, Professor MacLean was astonished to find unmistakable signs of an old channel, which parted from the present Tigris river channel at Samarra and ran a southerly course for a full 100 miles before rejoining the present channel at Bagdad. The importance of this discovery was at once apparent to Professor MacLean, for it was a graphic indication that the ancient Tigris had run through a different channel some fifteen miles south of the present one and that the sites of ancient cities, so carefully marked out by scientists, who based their calculations on the present channel of the Tigris, were actually 15 miles south of where they were supposed to be.

Ancient Chain of Cities.

In support of his discovery, Professor MacLean points to the many mounds strewn along the line of this old channel, indicating the ancient chain of cities once flourishing on the banks of the Tigris. Some of the most important cities of ancient times, including Opis, Sitace and Eski, Bagdad, with many still more primitive towns, have thus passed unnoticed while scientists were busy exploring the banks of the present Tigris.

Another surprising discovery was that of the ancient irrigation system, noted in the ancient chronicles, but never reconstructed. From the air Professor MacLean and Major Beaseley have been able to chart out entire systems of irrigation streams and ditches by simply sketching the lines of depression and discoloration. The results show a very unusual system of irrigation, closely resembling the skeleton of a bony fish, with the main ditch as the spinal column, and the local ditches as ribs and small bones.

TO RESTORE WAR INSURANCE

Veterans Who Permitted Term Insurance to Lapse Can Easily Get It Reinstated.

Washington.—It will be news to many World war veterans to learn that the United States veterans' bureau has inaugurated a reinstatement campaign for the benefit of those who, either through misunderstanding or inability to meet premium payments, have permitted their term (war time) insurance to lapse.

Director Forbes announces that no matter how long a time has passed since the last premium was paid, an ex-service man may easily renew his term (war time) insurance contract if he is in good health, or if he is disabled, provided the disability from which he is suffering is due to service and is not of a total and permanent nature. Veterans will be particularly interested in learning that they may reinstate $1,000 or any higher amount, in multiples of $500, of the amount of insurance they carried while in the service. It will also be of interest to the public to know that over 500,000 of the men who applied for insurance during the war have continued their policies in force and that these ex-service men and women are carrying insurance protection amounting to the enormous sum of over $3,000,000,000.

The reinstatement requirements have been made most liberal; in fact, if an ex-soldier is in good health it is only necessary for him to furnish medical proof of that fact, and pay two monthly premiums on the amount of term insurance to be reinstated. Physicians have been appointed in all of the branch offices of the bureau where ex-service men can secure the necessary medical examination without cost. Detailed information may be obtained by writing to the United States Veterans' Bureau, Washington, D. C., but in the interest of accurate identification and promptness, the person writing should be sure to give his full name, rank and organization when in the service and, if possible, his serial number.

Man Is Shot in Squabble Over Duck That Cat Stole

San Francisco.—Charles Palmer, after shooting a duck near Belmont, a suburb, was invited into the cabin home of Harry Shaw, a watchman, to get warm. When Palmer started to leave he missed the duck, and in the argument that followed, according to subsequent testimony, he was shot in the face. An undersheriff took them into custody despite their protests that their difference was purely a personal matter, and Palmer pleaded guilty to assault. Shaw insisted on paying Palmer's $10 fine and they went back to Shaw's cabin, where they found a pile of duck feathers and a guilty-looking cat.

LAUGH IS CAUSE OF MURDER

Boy Boasts of Killing Girl Who Mocked Him When He Missed Good Shot While Hunting Squirrels.

Iron Mountain, Mich.—Charged with killing a twelve-year-old girl who mocked him when he missed a good shot while hunting squirrels, John Shultz, seventeen years old, is under arrest here. The boy was arrested when he boasted of the killing to a boy friend, police declare.

Shultz and twelve-year-old Gusti Jagzte were hunting near their homes when the boy missed a shot at a chipmunk, he told friends. The girl laughed at her companion, and he shot her, causing her death almost instantly, the police charge.

Ragged Genius Gives Concert

LIFE STORY ONE OF TRAGEDY

Unkempt Prodigy of "Hoboes' College" Retains His Love of Music Through Vicissitudes That Pursue Shambling Life.

Philadelphia.—Music critics have ignored the concert given at the piano of the police station the other evening by Harry Tannehill of Pittsburgh and points West, more recently musical director of the Hoboes' college and pianist extraordinary.

Tannehill, cleverly disguised as a hobo—and one in all reality—gave the police several hours of uninterrupted ragtime and then tore off a lot of classical numbers that left the veriest patrolman feeling like an ambassador. He glided through a little Liszt, gave some Chopin dirges and then threw the whole outfit into raptures with a masterful interpretation of Rachmaninoff.

It was an impromptu affair entirely. The artist arrived at the little bare room opposite the cell tier shortly before seven o'clock, convoyed by Mulholland of the "motorcycles." His escort had lured him from the concrete campus of Hoboes' college.

For four hours he played his repertoire of melodies, jazz and classic. The station house did its usual nightly business of the district. Drunks were brought in—many of them. Vagrants were lodged. The police surgeon made his round. And all a glance into the music room disclosed to any of them was the sight of a little ragged figure, cap tossed aside, battered shoes, dirty sweater and unforgivable linen, sounding chords in a revery. Two revolver shots sounded, just around the corner. Someone receiving wrong change in a nearby cigar store had said it with gunfire. The music never stopped. It even grew stronger.

Tells Life Story.

Lieutenant Cocoran finally poked his head into the music room and ordered a halt. Then they got him talking. By now a metamorphosis had taken place. The "bum" had given way to the musician and Tannehill discoursed of music and his eventful past as if he were drinking wine with intimates on a terrace in fair Capri. He was forty-six, he said. Had taken up music at fourteen, studied the piano for eight years, three in the conservatory at Mount Union, O., and then for a time had gone on the concert stage. After that he tried teaching.

"Eight years ago," Tannehill said, "my wife deserted me and she took with her our three-year-old daughter. She may be alive today, she may be dead. I don't know and I haven't been able to find out. My little girl was my world; when she went, ambition followed."

The pianist came to Philadelphia nearly three years ago, but other than a few movie-palace performances he has been without work. He tried carpentry for a while, and other work more arduous, but was not equal to it.

"You know the rules of the Hoboes' college, don't you?" asked the bluff Mulholland of his protege. "If you get work, you're automatically expelled. You'll have to leave the institution."

A "Curtain Call."

"I don't care," answered the maestro. "Give me a few decent looking togs and several good meals in succession and I'll defy any of them to tell the bum from the musician. Just once more, before I die, I'd like to get loose in the vicinity of a grand piano."

A taste for music, like the love of a horse or a dog, is a saving grace; the last characteristic to go in the drop to degeneration; the first thing to build upon in the climb to rehabilitation. The police made up a purse for their visitor and asked him to play one more before he left.

"I'll give you a little 'William Tell,'" he announced. And under the manipulation of the nimble fingers of a master, the old piano awoke to a life it had never known. The master arose and bowed. Then, slowly, he passed out of the room.

He Lost His Cap.

A six-year-old, who had just started to school, was running frantically through the hall.

"What's the matter, sonny?" asked the teacher.

He said: "I can't find my cap."

"Where did you leave it?"

"Oh, in one of these here pantries."

HE WAS WORRIED; WIFE GREW WEAK, THIN AND SICKLY

Gave Up Housework—Hired a Girl—She Was Nervous, Fretful and Pale.

FRIEND TOLD HER HOW TO GET WELL

"My husband was worried about me. He was afraid I would fade away and at one time it looked like it. I was just a shadow. I hope other women don't suffer like I did," declared Mrs. A. Russell. "I finally became so frail and delicate and so weak and thin I had to give up doing my housework and hire it done. To walk any distance tired me all out. I was so nervous the slightest noise would wake me up or make me jump and my poor heart would beat like a triphammer. I had no energy or life at all, but now—thanks to a good friend who told me what to take for it—I am changed from a pale, weak, sickly woman into a strong, healthy, vigorous one. My friend told me what I needed was a few bottles of this new tonic called Hypo-Cod. I bought it right away and now my health and energy has come back. I discharged the hired girl after using three or four bottles and now do my own work. My face is full of good, healthy color and my husband says I have the old-time sparkle in my eyes. I surely do feel grand. I get up early each morning and do my housework—then go down town and when I return the only effect I feel is that I'm terribly hungry. I have already gained 7 lbs. in weight and I believe Hypo-Cod is the grandest tonic a weak, run-down woman can take," enthusiastically declared Mrs. Russell, 4745 Butler St., Pittsburgh.

Thousands of women foolishly drag along ignorant of the wonderful strides which have been made in modern medicine during the last few years. They should build, strengthen and tone themselves up—especially this time of year when so much dangerous sickness prevails everywhere. Hypo-Cod costs no more than weaker, old-fashioned medicines and does the work days and weeks sooner. It has a delightfully pleasant taste, too. All druggists have Earle's Hypo-Cod, $1.00 per large bottle, or write Earle Chemical Co., Wheeling, W. Va. Pay postman when it comes.—Advertisement.

Keep Off the Grass!

The little boy was fond of nursery rhymes and fairy tales, and was always asking questions about them.

One day he asked his mother: "Why didn't the man in the nursery rhyme put up a notice to 'keep off the grass'? Then he wouldn't have been cruel to the maiden."

"Which man, dear?" said his mother; "and to whom was he cruel?"

"Well," said the little chap, "nurse often tells me about the man all tattered and torn who kicked the maiden off the lawn!"
